How Many Women? 2008

“Imagine a [South Asian] city with street corners full of women: chatting, laughing, breast-feeding, exchanging corporate notes or planning protest meetings. Imagine footpaths spilling over with old and young women watching the world go by as they sip tea, and discuss love, cricket and the latest blockbuster. Imagine women in saris, jeans, salwars and skirts sitting at the nukkad reflecting on world politics and dissecting the rising sensex. If you can imagine this, you’re imagining a radically different city.”

WHY SHOULD I EMBARRASSED?

“We need to redefine our understanding of violence in relation to public space – to see not sexual assault, but the denial of access to public space as the worst possible outcome for women. What we might demand then is that women’s right to be in public space be unquestioned.”

SO WHAT 2 DO?

Girls at Dhabas organises bicycle rally in Lahore

“These bike rallies aim at give women a platform to reclaim the streets and cycle in public spaces without fear of harassment” - Sanayah Malik

dawn.com

28 March at 12:02

It's heartening to see the response to this event where male cyclists are lending their bicycles to women to encourage them, says Sanayah, one of the organisers of the rally.

Violence against women: changing the narrative from safety to access

Imagine an internet filled with women: writing, sharing stories, stupid selfies, photos with their partners, banners from protest meets. Imagine Facebook groups and twitter conversations spilling over with old and young women discussing the world go by, browsing articles on world politics and the rising sensex, discussing love, cricket and the latest blockbuster.

Imagine an internet where newsfeeds show women in saris, jeans, salwars and skirts, and none of them are sexualised or reprimanded. Where women do not police what they consume or share, and profiles are not 'filtered' to maintain respectability.

If you can imagine all this, you can imagine an internet you own.

Hey Larki,

YOU don't have to be fair to be lovely.

Look anywhere and everywhere,
there are blatant and subtle reinforcements that only fair is lovely.

The men have also joined the race
with equal number of fairness products for them.

Such pressure and so little public debate around it!

Stay UNFair.
Stay Beautiful.
